

ONE EARTH CONSERVATION

Our Conservation Work

One Earth Conservation's parrot conservation projects in the Americas positively impact people's lives by providing income so that they can choose to engage in meaningful and life-saving work. We also increase knowledge about parrots through research and monitoring, which improves conservation results and impacts other parrot conservation projects worldwide.

We currently have active projects in Guatemala, Guyana, Honduras, Nicaragua and Paraguay, and are building new projects in French Guiana, Suriname and Brazil. Our project in La Moskitia, Honduras, remains the largest community patrolled parrot conservation project in the world. Local partners begin projects with complete ownership and, over time, lead and design conservation efforts due to capacity building activities led by One Earth Conservation.

Results have been astounding given the multiple and dire threats against the people and parrots of this region, though the future of parrots remains tenuous in many locations. You can become part of this exciting and fruitful work by joining our Parrot Conservation Corps where you can help parrots and people where they are from where you are. For more information, please visit our website (our annual reports can be found on the About Us page).

One Earth Conservation engages people, communities and organizations in a unique manner that inspires them to contribute to their own well-being and the well-being of life on Earth. We achieve this by encouraging them to support and/or conduct parrot conservation in the Americas and to nurture themselves in nature.

NURTURE NATURE PROGRAM:

We inspire, motivate, educate, and support people to take care of themselves, their organizations, other individuals of all species, and the biotic community. To achieve this, we offer resources through our website, such as our Nurture Nature Academy, Nurture Nature live presentations, Nurture Nature Communities and our book, Nurturing Discussions and Practices: Nurture Nature, Yourself and Your Relationships.

We Empower Others

CONSERVATION & CLIMATE:

We lead and partner with conservationists, communities, and organizations in the Americas to successfully preserve their parrots through multiple conservation approaches, many of which address the illegal wildlife trade. We also support climate activists. You can learn more about Rev. Dr. LoraKim Joyner's 33 years of conservation work by reading her memoir, Conservation in Time of War.

There are many needs on our one Earth. One Earth Conservation seeks to heal human systems that diminish individual worth and separates people artificially from the rest of nature. We affirm that people must be healthy and develop multiple intelligences so all of life, individuals and human and biotic systems on Earth can flourish.
